pguzid, fukhsi gharib, Document is based on the word of God. So, Qur'an is the final proof for the authenticity and acceptability of this letter. The doctrine of Trinity is the new doctrine of the universal pagan church (4). We have published the book A general survey of the details of the Qur'an and the fact that the so-called 'Holy Bible' is a fake book; as well as that it is a copy of the Holy Qur'an. Documentary proof of this Language and Literacy in the 19th Century The period of the Industrial Revolution, the mid-19th century, saw many changes in how people lived, learnt and communicated. Things that were commonplace in the years before, such as reading and writing, became more widespread, and literacy rates increased. There were changes in the way the everyday life of the working classes was lived. A poor education left many people with few skills, and unable to access information. This meant that people relied heavily on the press to keep them informed of the changes taking place all around them. Changes in the newspapers The newspaper was a late invention, originally being used by a single, wealthy man to spread a message to his employees. The newspaper soon became a vital tool for all kinds of people, from common men to businessmen and politicians. As literacy increased, so did the number of people reading the newspaper. In 1835, the Times and the Daily News had three million readers, and by 1851, they had thirteen million. In the early 19th century, there were only a handful of papers in London, which each sold for a very high price. In the middle of the century, the number of papers had increased to almost a hundred, and many of them were cheaper to read. This change in the newspaper business meant that people of all classes were able to read the newspaper. As more and more people started reading the newspapers, they had a better idea of what was going on in their local area. An increasing amount of information was available, and was easy to access. This meant that people had less need to travel all the way to the town hall to find out what was going on, or why they couldn't find a job. Because people had easy access to information, they also had a more accurate idea of what was really going on. This meant that they were much
